

Dayton, OH

VI

Jan. 23, 1812

The Ohio Centinel
Jan. 30, 1812

ANOTHER EARTHQUAKE

Between eight and nine o'clock on Thursday morning the 23rd instant, we had another shock of an earthquake, more severe, it is generally supposed, than any of those which preceded it. We are told that it was equally alarming at Cincinnati and other adjacent towns.

Since the above, several slight shocks have been felt in this place. The most considerable happened on the morning of the 27th. It agitated the houses considerably, and articles suspended in the stores were kept in motion about one minute.